The following sections explain how to work with layers, effects, blending modes, and adjusting color. Organizing Your Layers Photoshop provides a layer-based work environment, which makes it efficient and straightforward. Layers are a fundamental aspect of the editing process. Layers give you the ability to vary light and shadow, as well as correct color in a single file. The layer system enables you to do so with ease. If you own other editing programs, you can convert your layers into the other tools' layers. Layers enable you to mask your photo, meaning that you are able to apply an adjustment to part of the photo but keep the rest of the photo unaltered. You can easily add more layers to the image after you've made an adjustment. Each layer has a dedicated icon that you can click to give the layer a name and to select it. Generally, each layer contains one or more adjustments; thus, the layer is used to show the current settings. (You can also hide a layer from view and then display the hidden layer by pressing Ctrl+H (+H). Figure 9-1 shows you the basic tools and layers in Photoshop. Figure 9-1: Use the tools and layers to create a layered image. Selecting Layers You can select an individual layer or set of layers by selecting the icon for the layer or layers. You can select a layer by pressing Shift+Ctrl+up or Shift+Ctrl+down, or by clicking the Layer palette icon. The icon for the current layer is highlighted as well. You can also select multiple layers or groups of layers by using the Select by Color or Type tool. After you've made a selection, click inside the selection area to add to the selection, or press Enter to apply the selection. You can also use the Selection Brush in Photoshop to create selections. By clicking on a layer or layer groups icon in the Layers palette, you can quickly jump to that layer or layers in the document window. You also have the ability to create new layers from the Layers palette. You can quickly create a duplicate layer by using the Layer⇒Duplicate Layer command. This command copies a layer as a new layer and then groups the layers, giving you options to rename the new layer. You can also create a new layer group from the Layer⇒New Group Layer command. With this command,

Q: Javascript replaceAll returns /0 I'm using HTML5's new API which lets me talk to the filesystem for some validation purposes. I have the code to read a path and check that it's a file and if so, check that it's a file that I created. That part works great. Now, I'm trying to turn my results into a string. The desired output would be my file's directory, so if the file is in /home/me/folder/ it would turn out to be /home/me/folder/ I'm trying to use replaceAll, and it's giving me /0/home/me/folder/ I can't figure out why. Here's the code, it's called just like I want it: var files = ["file.txt", "update.txt", "folder", "file.txt", "update.txt", "folder", "folder/file.txt", "folder/update.txt"]; console.log(files.join(" ")); files.forEach(function(file) { console.log(file); var path = file; console.log(path); path = path.replaceAll(" ", "/"); console.log(path); }); When I run it, I get this in the console: /file.txt /update.txt /folder /file.txt /update.txt /folder /folder/file.txt /folder/update.txt Basically, it's replacing the newline characters with "/", and all that is in the console is the path of the file. Why is it doing this, and how do I correct it? A: You might be getting confused with how JavaScript's replaceAll method works. That method will return a modified copy of the input string if the input string contains substrings that match the regular expression you give it. In your case, file consists of 0 or more newline characters, so all of the strings you used in replaceAll are actually substrings of the file and the method will return a modified string matching the regular expression you gave it. Because your files have spaces in them, you need to match on the containing characters.
